The Metro-Minnesota Community Oncology Research Consortium (MMCORC) is a nonprofit research program sponsored by the National Cancer Institute (NCI) and participating community hospitals and clinics. Together, this program gives people in our community access to the newest therapies available for cancer treatment, symptom management and cancer prevention.

The MMCORC links community cancer specialists, primary care physicians and other health professionals to NCI-approved research studies from medical experts across the country. Your physician and health care team can connect you to these resources and discuss your options.

When you join a clinical trial, you are taking an active role in your health care, gaining timely access to new treatments, and helping others by contributing to medical advances. Talk to your cancer care team to see if there is a clinical trial to consider as part of your cancer care.
